THE MAJORITY—By J. B. Johnson.

Majorities and Minorities will always have their contests; for mankind are fond of change, and soon forget the usage of their fathers. Popular sentiment is ever fickle in point and policy, and frequently, that which it considers patriotism in one decade, is often condemned as treason by it in the next. Minorities soon grow to be Majorities; and the transition of a Democracy to a Despotism is sometimes as sudden as it is irrevocable, and leaves the wrecks of peaceful laws' fairest promises, amid the fearful turmoil of angry anarchy. The more populous a Nation, the greater is its incapacity to govern itself, and the more likely will it be convulsed by intestine broils and internecine wars. A large mass of people will always have diversified interests, which, sooner or later, clash, and bring the legitimate result of their discordant association. If a people could always believe that their political, religious and pecuniary welfare, is best preserved by mutual concession and conciliation, they would ever be stable in their government; but this they will not do, and cannot be prevented, by human agency, from suffering all the pains of human agony, from suffering all the pains of human agony, from suffering all the pains of human agony. They will work themselves into classes or parties, and these classes or parties will have centers which each discuss with so much zeal, that hatred, one of the other, is produced, and all the elements of strife display their respective parts. If reconciliation is not attained, and the dissenting elements are kept in unceasing contention, open war is the inevitable consequence, and, both parties breaking away from the laws that once bound them, continue the struggle, until the weaker is forced to yield, and an array of governmental procedure, differing from that which told their amicable attitude, is introduced, in order to keep the discomfited in subjection. It is in this way, that a people break faith with themselves, and although the conquering and the conquered may live under the same named Nation, and appear to obey the same laws, a government once ruined from internal causes, and re-established by force against itself, is but a political bubble, and can never be its original again; for the contortions of civil war, give it a new form, a new direction, and a new destiny, and long as the patriot ceases to sigh over its downfall, the finger of decay carries all remembrance to its former self, and bitter memory leaves tradition to tell its doleful tale.

The defect of Democracies is, that they cannot, in any possible manner, provide against the constantly increasing vices of the mercenary, the corrupt, and the ambitious. The provisions of such constitutions are based upon the intelligence and wisdom of the masses; and if people never changed in habits and moral worth, such a basis would not be a presumption; but they do change, and each generation comes forward with new tastes, new habits, and a different education. They will always have a disposition to make rules and regulations to suit themselves, and cannot be induced to deport themselves in a manner after their fathers. Impatience leads them to be clamorous for reform, and if their efforts at reformation do not result in a radical change of the laws of their country, they eventually in a partial alteration of them, and illustrate the folly and impracticability of one generation attempting to bind, by legislative enactments, the habits and tastes of those that may come after it.

Law is intended to guard the virtuous and well-disposed against the vicious and evil disposed. It has no other object; and as long as the dominant sentiment of a popular government sustains its organic laws, they will be the governing principle in its action; but as soon as the support of the Majority is withdrawn, they become inapplicable, and a demand for their repeal or modification, is at once instituted without regard to the present or prospective bearing which such a repeal or modification will have upon the welfare of the public; for a reckless majority wills it, and irrespective of consequences, enforces the full demand of its pleasure. Mutability is the order of all the work of man; and in every community going on between the Majority and Minority. As it is in the physical world, so it is in the political, the stronger is ever endeavoring to make the weaker subservient to its desires; and the best plans of the Statesman for the government of mankind, are but a temporary truce between conflicting interests and violent passions.

THE OLD GAME.—The Baltimore American of last week, in its summary of the news of the day, very coolly inserted the following paragraph:
"Major Walker, commanding at Aiken, South Carolina, has issued an order reciting that in order to carry out the verbal instructions of the Major General commanding the department, to protect the homes of families and the rights of the freedmen, Lieutenant Walsh will in all cases where the property of colored people, such as houses, barns, stables, &c., have been wantonly destroyed, cause the residents of the immediate vicinity to rebuild the same, and in case of their refusal to comply with such order, the buildings so destroyed are to be erected under the direction of Lieutenant Walsh, who will levy a tax upon the surrounding residents in a proportion sufficient to defray the expenses of the United States Government."
This, indeed, the old game was played over.

WHITE'S PATENT LEVER TRUSS.—warranted to be the very best truss in use, for the retention and radical cure of Hernia. This instrument is different in principle and action from all other trusses, combining several valuable points in other trusses, besides several points of the highest value, never before attained. It has an applicant metal bow; padding, or the pad itself, changed in an instant; graduating pressure power perfectly controlled by one screw; combined inward and upward action; works over a knuckle, requiring less than half the usual pressure; no pressure on the back, and none on the spermatic cord; does not work up or out of place; having no stuffed pad; smallest, lightest, cleanest, cheapest, most durable; holds the rupture in every case; is a radical cure; will in every case, that any other truss will not, effect a permanent cure. The necessity of other trusses for the treatment of Congenital Hernia, has long been felt. It is perfectly simple, light, durable, efficient and cleanly, and will cure in every case when properly adjusted. For sale by FERTILIZERS, &c.

IMPORTANT TO FARMERS.
DAWSON'S FERTILIZERS. These Fertilizers are offered to the farmer as among the best and cheapest food for plants, containing a large proportion of BONE PHOSPHATE OF LIME, AND ANIMAL MATTER, capable of furnishing AMMONIA. By decomposition they furnish those ingredients most needed by the crops, and which are usually deficient in our soils. For
